Kerakoll GreenLab: the future of construction

The Kerakoll science park, which houses the new Kerakoll GreenLab research centre, is dedicated to research and technological development in the field of green building materials.

The futuristic building groups all the Kerakoll group's new scientific laboratories together to form a single research centre, with an exclusive green technology program. Since 2010 the Group's investment in green research has represented 100% of total Research and Development investments, which translates into a constant technological improvement in products, in line with the principles of ecologically sustainable development.

The Kerakoll GreenLab unites 9 advanced laboratories, each one specializing in the development of green technology and research projects on strategic questions.
